

Dear Students,

Summer is the perfect time to become lost in a good book. One of the major benefits of reading is how it contributes to our personal growth. Reading allows you to learn from the experiences of others.

As you read, it is important to be aware of your thinking. To help guide your thinking while you read, you might ask yourself the following questions:

- Who are the main characters and how would you describe them? How do the characters relate to one another? What are their needs?
- What is the conflict or problem that the characters are facing? Remember that there are often minor difficulties that the characters are dealing with, but those issues are resolved quickly in the story. The main conflict can be followed throughout the book; the little problems usually encircle the big issue.
- Due to the problem the characters are facing, the main characters will frequently undergo some kind of change or will experience personal growth, in order to resolve the conflict. What lesson did the main character(s) learn as a result of overcoming the problem? Can you make a personal connection to this lesson or the “big idea”?

Assignment:

Over the course of the summer, please read lots of books! For language arts class, I’d like you to read at least three. Choose two from the enclosed list, and then one other that you think you would enjoy but that is not on the list. When school starts, be prepared to complete a project about one of the books you have read and to explain the plot for all three of them.

I also encourage you to do some creative writing or keep a journal of your summer experiences, though this is not required for language arts class.

If you are looking for resources or other ways to get ideas and keep track of reading, try these web sites:

- Young Adult Library Services Association (YALSA): go to the Book Awards & Book/Media Lists Page

If you have any questions about summer reading, please send me an email at cfischer@ashmi.org. Enjoy your summer and happy reading!
